

Herman Miller

Cubix™

Cubix is a flexible way to manage personal territory, desktop storage and technology. It is a series of compact modules designed to house a range of media and personal items.

Cubix was designed by Herman Miller in collaboration with Barry Jenkins of UK based Broome Jenkins.

‘Encouraged by Herman Miller’s brief, the project explored themes around personal space and territory, flexibility, placement, and the need for personal control’ says Barry Jenkins. ‘The result is a compact, flexible and modern system designed to manage human and technological needs together, without compromising each other.

At one level Cubix is a storage product, but it is not just about the storage of paper media. Considering the preferences and work styles of many different users, the elements of Cubix can meet the organisational needs of someone who is fully committed to a digital, electronic world, as well as those who need to use paper.

Cubix is simply placed on the desktop, in front or to the side of the user, to provide convenient active storage and territory delineation. In some cases, boxes can be stacked and reconfigured.

Cubix is beautifully detailed and designed to work with Herman Miller’s system furniture products, Sense and Abak Environments. Cubix breaks with conformity, allowing creative space planning while offering workspace definition. Areas are dramatically transformed through the addition or removal of elements.

What are the products?

-> Door boxes, A4 and A5 size, single or dual access, without doors or with steel doors
-> Service boxes, A4 and A5 size, providing an integrated solution to desktop power and data distribution as well as other storage capability
-> A range of trays to tidy small mobile devices and cables or paper media and other personal items
-> A lightweight panel in various widths, to provide flexible means of territory and management and a degree of privacy for concentration
-> Accessories including clamps, stacking kits, locks, shelf and tray kits enabling the user to configure Cubix to meet their personal requirements

Designed to not only compliment Herman Miller's broader offer, but also to add an attractive and stylish dimension to the workplace, Cubix's clever use of materials and finishes, allows it to take a desirable persona, its appearance and functionality, injecting flexibility, engagement and a sense of ownership.

Cubix has been designed and evaluated by Herman Miller's rigorous 'Design for the Environment' protocol, emphasising safe materials, recyclability and ease of disassembly.
